BIOGRAPHICAL NOTES:

Lived all his life at Kirkby Lonsdale, residing at Abbots Brow. Articled to his father in 1888, he worked for some 57 years in the family firm of Pearson and Pearson. Very much the 'Country Solicitor' as he chose to call himself in his autobiography written in 1947. There he refers to this 'venture into Literature'. For about 30 years, he amassed his material, giving lectures or readings on local antiquities, until he decided to publish with much encouragement from his friends incl. Lord and Lady Bentinck.

NOTES:

A comfortable village history written from the personal point of view of a professional man, full of anecdotal details. Not a great work of historical scholarship but interesting and informative and well written. He faithfully details the customs and traditions of his neighbours in this ancient Westmorland market town. It is a very human account of life before the Second World War.
